INTELLIGENCE DATA TO INTEGRATE INSITESM AND INTELLISCOPESM

New Product Will Be a More Powerful Business Intelligence Tool Offering a Range of In-Depth Content and Unique Features

BOSTON, July 27, 2001 – Over the coming months, Intelligence Data will combine the strengths of our popular InSite and Intelliscope products into a powerful new Intelliscope. The enhanced Intelliscope will carry over the redesigned user interface and new features rolled out during its well-received June 2001 release, and it will also incorporate the full complement of InSite content from Thomson Financial's acclaimed Gale Group, including trade journals, newswires, and company profiles. In addition, Intelligence Data will also integrate InSite's unique search criteria such as keywords and business topics into the new product.

“We believe that the InSite content and functionality, coupled with the introduction of a single platform that allows access to broker research and morning meeting notes, will prove to be a powerful research tool for all of our customers,” says Cheryl Curran, executive vice president, Intelligence Data. “We anticipate that all InSite users will benefit from the new Intelliscope features and improved user interface we introduced in early June. Furthermore, those users who currently subscribe to both InSite and Intelliscope will save a considerable amount of time with the ability to conduct cross-database searches and retrieve results from multiple content sets at the same time.”

The integration of the two products is expected to take place before the end of 2001. During the next several months, Intelligence Data will continue to provide you with product conversion information via e-mail and the product announcement link on the InSite login page.
